Bachelor of Arts in

Archaeology

Applicant Profile

Applicants are expected to have ethical principles and an interest in exploring, understanding, and valuing the historical processes and sociocultural realities of peoples through fieldwork and multidisciplinary research.

Employability

Archaeology's alumni may work in the public, private, community, and academic sectors in areas such as:

- Scientific research
- Outreach activities and cultural heritage management
- Multidisciplinary projects related to cultural heritage, territorial planning, and applied studies

Professional Skills

Interpret evidence through theoretical and practical approaches, conduct archaeological and anthropological research, and apply communication and organizational skills to present findings and results to society.

In fact...

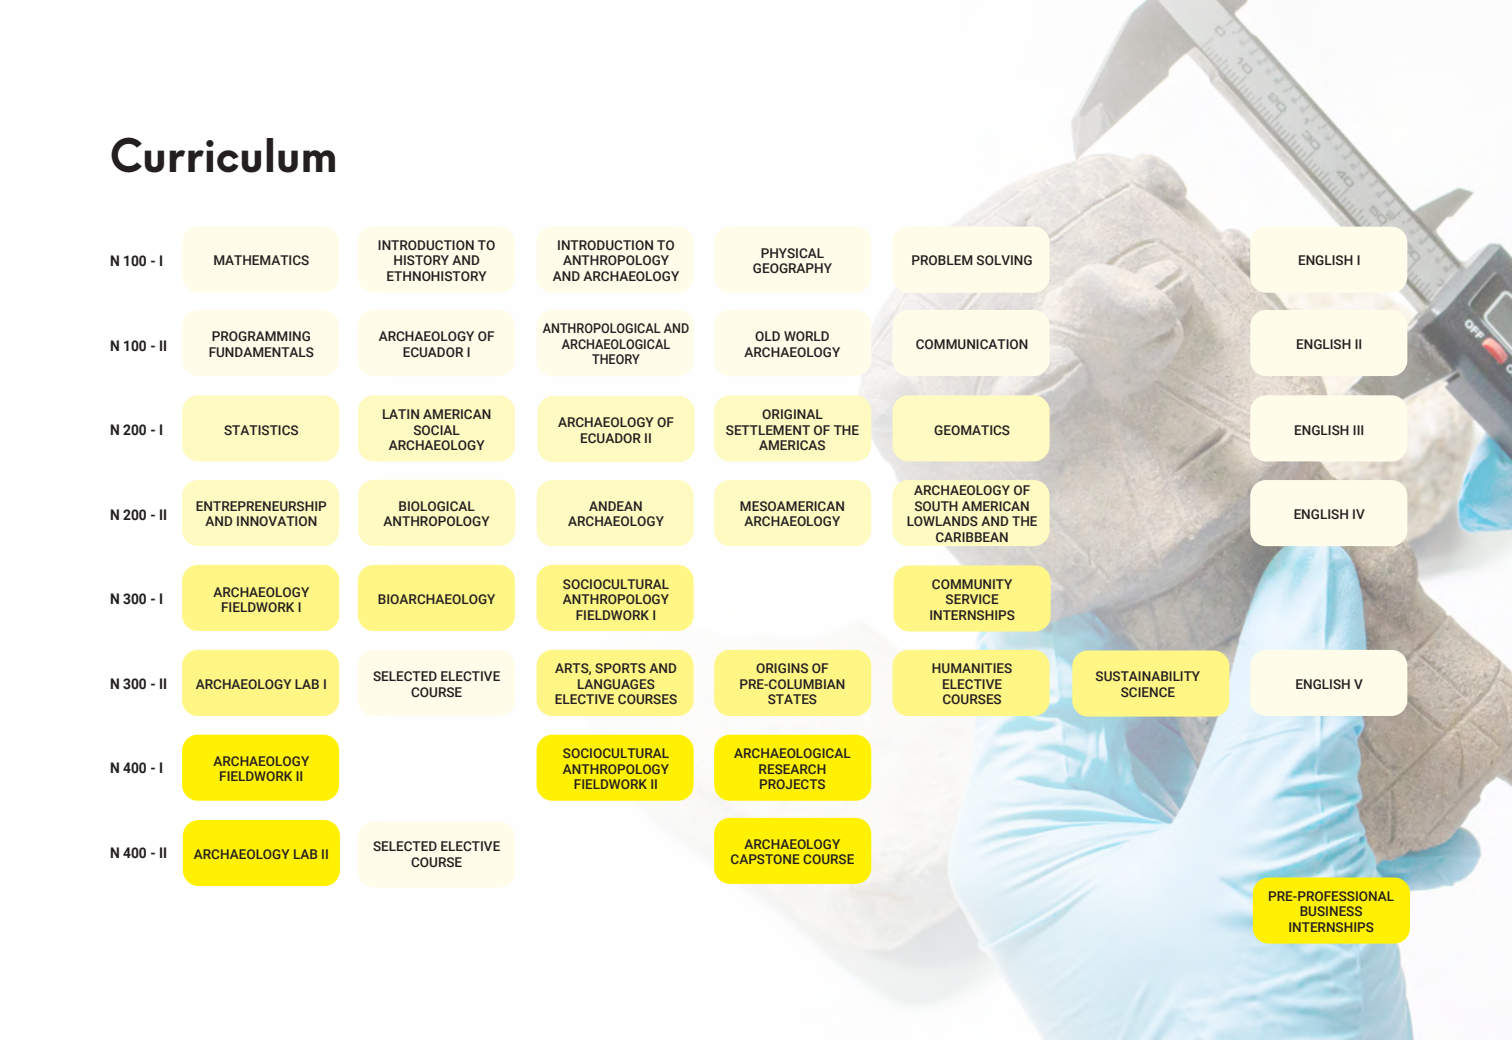

Archaeology is the only social science that studies human behavior through material remains from the past, explaining the history of the human species and helping guide it toward a better future.
